Normally, without COVID, the Spring Festival (or Lunar New Year) is the occasion of the World's Largest Migration, the chunyun, the Chinese New Year Migration.

Hundreds of millions of people usually leave their cities in order to visit their families in more rural parts of the country. In fact, practically all of China takes holiday at once, making the new year the biggest human event on earth.

Comparing China's largest annual migration with North America's is a good way to gauge its sheer size.

Pre-COVID Thanksgiving 2017 saw 50.9 million travelers negotiate long tailbacks on the interstate and overcrowded airports. Even though Thanksgiving is a major travel event, China's new year is still seven times bigger, with its massive population making a big difference of course.

Known as chunyun, the annual new year migration in China also easily surpasses the world's biggest pilgrimages in scale, with Arba'een and the Hajj much smaller by comparison.

Lunar New Year celebrations normally last 3-16 days, depending on where you are, ending with the “Lantern Festival”.

Enjoy the New Year!

Wherever you are.

During the celebration avoid eating foods that are white, for good luck in the new year.

But do eat some “longevity noodles” (changshou mian), some “spring rolls”, and some oranges (or kumquats, or tangerines, or pomelos), some steamed whole fish, and sticky rice “year cake” (nian gao), “prosperity cake” (fa gao), sweet rice balls (tang yuan), and some dumplings. (According to ancient legend, the number of dumplings you eat during the Chinese New Year predicts the amount of money you’ll make in the upcoming year, so the more, the better.)
